Engineer.

TICTOR M. CLEMENT, the worldfamous mining engineer, of this city, with a remarkable career, died yesterday morning in Saltillo, Mexico, according to a message recelved by The Herald yesterday aftertoon. Death followed a serious abdominal operation which he underwent dominal operation which he underwent a few days ago. The nature of the operation is not known here, as none of the messages have given any information on that point, but it is supposed to have been appendicitis. Before he left this city, nearly two months ago, Mr. Clement had a severe attack of in grippe and was confined to his bed for a time, but it was supposed that he was in perfect health when he left. The first intimation of his illness came. Saturday afternoon, when Duncan Mc-Vichle received a telegram from Mrs. Clement. The message was as follows:

"Mr. Clement underwent serious abdominal operation. He is resting well. Tell friends.

"F. L. CLEMENT." "F. L. CLEMENT."

From the tone of this message it was not supposed that Mr. Clement was in any serious condition. Yesterday Mr. McVichie received another message, announcing the death of the mining man at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. This telegram and a similar one received by The Herald were signed by R. C. Gemmell, former state engineer of Utah and recently Mr. Clement's chief engineer in charge of his Mexico properties.

The sudden death of Mr. Clement marks the passing of one who as an authority on mining matters was ranked among the foremost in the world. He was known around the globe for his ability. He has experted mines in almost every part of both continents, and has been prominently indentified with many big mining ventures. In England he was known as well or perhaps better than he was in most parts of this country. His word has long been considered the highest authority on matters pertaining to mining engineering. It has been said of him that on his word alone he could craise more money on a mining proposition than any other man is the world. He was a close friend of John Hays Hammond and went through the Jamieson raid in South Africa with him, barely escaping being executed with other prisoners taken by the Squth African government. there. He was prominently identified with the operation of the Burker Hill and Sullivan properties as manager.

Later on Mr. Clement became associated with John Hays Hammond and went to South Africa. There he was identified prominently with the development of the famous Rand mine. It was he who planned the great mills for reducing that orc. He was also prominent in the development of other propreducing that orc. He was also promi-nent in the development of other prop-erties in that section of the dark con-tinent. He was there at the time of the Jamieson raid. It will be remem-bered that there was a scheme on foot among the Englishmen Interested in the mines of that country to overthrow by rowdies and badly cut about the head. Another man was driving homeward when he was attacked, and was forced to turn back into the town, while a car of young men proceeding to a concert in Lissan, in connection with the Catholic Temperance association, were also attacked.

After being released Mr. Clement came back to this country, but later returned to London, where he remained for some time. He was engaged in mining engineering there and became known for his ability as an expert throughout Great Britain. His reputation was such that he was called upon to go into Siberia and look into the mines of that country. He made the trip through that section, examining the mines, but nothing of special importance ever resulted from the investigation. when Mr. Clement returned to this

When Mr. Clement returned to this country he became engaged with Captain J. R. De Lamar. He remained with him as manager of his properties for about six months.

For the past three years Mr. Clement has been giving most of his attention to extensive mining properties which he acquired in the vicinity of Saltillo, Mexico. He had very valuable mining interests there, but it is understood that shortly before his death he disposed of the greater portion of his interests to the Guggenhelm Exploration company. He was also interested very heavily in mining ventures, local securities and industrial stocks in this city. It was understood that after the sale of his Mexican properties he intended to begin more extensive operations here and devote more of his time to his local interests. Only a short time before he left here the last time tions here and devote more of his time to his local interests. Only a short time before he left here the last time he remarked, in the course of a conversation with a friend, that he liked Sait Lake as a residence place better than any city he had ever been in, and that he had great plans for the future in local investments and improvements. Only a year ago Mr. Clement was made a handsome offer to return to South Africa to manage a mine there, but he refused on account of his Mexican and local interests.

Clement left here about March 5 on his last trip and took his wife with him. She was always a faithful com-panion, going with him wherever he might be called upon to go. He was fond of hunting and fishing, but appar-ently no more so than his wife, who generous subscriptions were announced, including 2100 from Archbishop Walsh of Dublin.

On the 30th ult., at the Wicklow petty sessions, R. Fitzgerald of Castlettimon, was sent to jail for three weeks for having assaulted his wife. The latter would not press the charge, as her husband had promised to take the pledge. A further charge of cruelty to defendant's child could not be proceeded with, Mrs. Fitzgerald declining to give evidence.

ently no more so than his wife, who was wont to shoulder a gun or rod and enjoy the sport with her husband. Mr. Clement has always been known for his absolute fearlessness, and a flon hunt which he indulged in in South Africa is used to illustrate his courage. He had been anxious to kill one of the king of beasts. On one occasion, when alone in the wild jungles, he spied a big lion coming over a ridge a short distance in front of him. Without a thought of his danger he raised his gun and fired. Then, as he expressed it to a friend in later years, he "waited until the smoke cleared away to see what was going to happen next." The lion til the smoke cleared away to see what was going to happen next." The lion had disappeared when the smoke was gone, and when he walked over the ridge he found the beast lying dead. The skin made into a rug is a trophy that now graces the Brigham street residence of the deceased.

Word has not been received from Mexico as to what disposition will be made of the remains, but it is supposed that they will be brought here for interment.

"It's pretty near time for the catnip trouble to start up again," the suburban conductor remarked to the other man standing on the platform.

"The catnip trouble." repeated the other man. "What's the 'catnip trouble?"

"Oh," explained the conductor. "out where my car runs catnip grows all along the track—there's pretly near a mile of catnip out there. Several years ago I brought in a little bundle and gave it to one of my neighbors for her cat. She parceled out that catnip all around the block to all the other people who had cats; and they tell me the cats nearly lost their minds over that fresh catnip. Most town cats, you know, never get any catnip except this old, dried stuff from the drug stores. It's pitful, isn't it? I suppose lots of nice cats have lived and died without ever tasting a bit of fresh country catnip.

"Well, pretty soon some of the other neighbors began asking me to bring them a little bundle of catnip, and the thing rolled up until now I run a big catnip business all summer—without a cent of money in it, either. I had to have my daughter make a list of my catnip customers, and I take them in turn—all summer long until cold weather comes.

"The story has got out on ms. too."

comes story has got out on me, too."

"The story has got out on me, too."
concluded the conductor, looking a trifle sheepish, "and some of the other men call me 'Oid Catnin, and they call my car 'The Catnip Car.' But, Jiminy! I don't care, it pleases a lot of women and pleases a lot of cats, and, by gracious, I'd rather please women and cats than please most of the men, I know, Yes, I smell of catnip all summer long; but, what's the difference—it's a good, clean smell, catnip is."
